The True Story of Amelia Earhart's Disappearance

What really happened to Amelia Earhart?

It remains one of the greatest unsolved mysteries of the 20th century, but Peoria Public Library presents the one person who may have solved it this Saturday, July 9 at North Branch, 3001 W. Grand Pkwy.

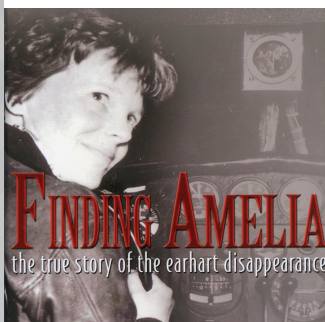

A recognized authority on Earhart's disappearance by the U.S. Naval Institute, Gillespie has led more than eight archaeological expeditions to the Pacific in the 30-plus years that he and his group – The International Group for Historic Aircraft Recovery (TIGHAR) – have been researching Earhart's failed 1937 attempt to fly around the world.

Amelia Earhart, a record-breaking pilot and the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic, was attempting to fly around the world in 1937. She and her navigator Fred Noonan were last seen alive on July 2, 1937 in Lae, New Guinea. They never made it to their next refueling spot, Howland Island, a small, uninhabited coral island in the South Pacific Ocean. President Franklin D. Roosevelt authorized a massive search, but on July 19, 1937, Earhart and Noonan were declared lost at sea.

To this day, their plane has never been found.

But Gillespie, a flight accident investigator and executive director of TIGHAR, has found some evidence – a woman's shoe and cosmetics jar from the 1930s, among other things - to support TIGHAR's theory of what really happened to Earhart and Noonan.

Intrigued? Join us for this special presentation. Free and open to the public.

Magic at Lincoln Branch with Joel Shoemaker

He's a librarian. Poof! Now he's an author. Poof! Now he's a magician. Actually, Joel Shoemaker was a magician first. He started doing magic tricks at the magical age of 7. Now he's an award-winning magician who performs across the country when he isn't writing books or being a librarian.

He's bringing his talents to Peoria Public Library Lincoln Branch at 10 a.m. Tuesday, July 12. Lincoln Branch, our only Carnegie library, is located at 1312 W. Lincoln Ave. Free and open to children of all ages.
